History of TCI Tiva

The earliest evidence of human habitation in TCI Tiva dates back to the Bronze Age. The city was first mentioned in written records in the 6th century BC, when it was part of the Lycian League. Tiva reached its peak during the Roman period, when it became a major center of trade and culture. The city was home to a large population of Greek and Roman citizens, and its ruins today include a number of impressive temples, theaters, and other public buildings.

Tiva was abandoned in the 7th century AD, after it was destroyed by an earthquake. The city was rediscovered in the 19th century, and excavations have been ongoing ever since.

The Ruins of TCI Tiva

The ruins of TCI Tiva are located on a hill overlooking the Mediterranean Sea. The city is divided into two parts: the upper city and the lower city. The upper city was home to the city's elite, while the lower city was home to the common people.

The upper city is dominated by the ruins of the Temple of Zeus. The temple was built in the 2nd century AD, and it is one of the largest and most impressive temples in Turkey. The temple is surrounded by a number of other public buildings, including the theater, the odeon, and the bouleuterion.

The lower city is home to a number of residential buildings, as well as a number of shops and workshops. The lower city also contains the ruins of the city's harbor.
