The seeds of independence were sown during the American Revolution, a pivotal conflict that pitted the colonists against the British Empire. The Great Depression of the 1930s plunged the United States into an unprecedented economic crisis. Mass unemployment, poverty, and social unrest gripped the nation. The New Deal, a series of government programs implemented by President Franklin D. Roosevelt, helped to alleviate some of the suffering and set the stage for economic recovery.

The United States emerged from the Great Depression only to be drawn into the maelstrom of World War II. As the Allies fought against the Axis powers, American soldiers played a pivotal role in securing victory in Europe and the Pacific. The war solidified the United States' position as a global superpower.

Post-War Prosperity and the Civil Rights Movement

The post-World War II era ushered in a period of unprecedented economic prosperity for the United States. The GI Bill, technological advancements, and a strong consumer culture fueled a surge in growth and living standards.
