

Transnational Maronites, Jews, and Arabs Under the French Mandate: Rethinking Identity and Community in the Levant

By Author Name

Transnational Maronites, Jews, and Arabs Under the French Mandate: Rethinking Identity and Community in the Levant is a groundbreaking work that explores the complex and often overlooked history of these three communities during the French Mandate period (1920-1946). Using a transnational lens, the book examines how these communities interacted with each other and with the French authorities, and how their identities and relationships were shaped by the political, economic, and social conditions of the time.
